DUNCAN'S COMMENTS:

I have always thought of Denver as a boom or bust market. Radio revenue growth was great in the early 80's and then awful until the mid 90's. Then from 2001 to 2004 it was awful again. Fortunately the number of viable stations has remained steady. Unfortunately radio listening levels have declined by 23% since 1990. Also of concern is the amount of listening devoted to unlisted stations...nearly 20% which is 114% greater than in 1992. NPR type stations do very well in Denver.

KOA has a similar history as that of WLW in Cincinnati. Both were declining AM's until the Jacor folks worked their magic on them. Both use a noisy, in your face, male oriented station. Both should bill over $30 million within the next few years.

The other station that I greatly admire is KBCO. Why more stations do not adopt a free form AOR is beyond me. Perhaps the problem is that it takes time for a KBCO-type station to develop. Time and patience are traits few radio owners have had.
